Many people with disabilities use computers for communication. It is part of their livelihood, and to take away VoIP or any type of technology of this sort would be a diaster for them. Also, putting unnecessary taxes and costs on them for such services would be a burden to people with disabilities, especially those who are on fixed income.